“ArcelorMittal Liberia announced that it had taken the difficult, but necessary decision to reduce its national workforce by 16 per cent, with 198 jobs impacted, in order for its operations to remain competitive in light of a low iron ore price environment.

At the suggestion of the Ministry of Labor, a team of psychosocial experts were brought in to train supervisors and managers on how to engage with the workforce to reduce the stress and other concerns during this very difficult time.

This training played a significant role in how supervisors and managers delivered the difficult news to affected workers and the workforce in general. The Africabio training was engaging and practical.”
